Zero what better name for the overclocking site than your warranty? While VYW hosts a news section, the rest is dedicated to product reviews. Categories include case modded, motherboard, case, sound card and a few others. The pieces are well and thorough, but there's very little content here- and very little dedicated to the theme, overclocking, tweaking and mode at hand to complete the site's mission. Blend Images - Jose Luis Pelaz Inc./Brand X Pictures/Getty Images There are four different types of warranty express warranty, implied warranty, lifetime warranty and extended warranty. Warranty is a guarantee on an article or service that includes repairs or replacements if the article does not meet the standards contained. An express warranty is a guarantee from the seller specifying the extent to which a product's quality and performance assurance is. It also says under what conditions a product can be returned or replaced. An implied warranty arises from the nature of the transaction and includes fitness warranties, merchantability warranties and title warranties. Lifetime warranty is a guarantee on the lifetime of the product in the market. If a product is eventually discontinued, the lifetime warranty remains valid for a few more years after the product is not manufactured. An extended warranty refers to guaranteeing the reliability of the product under the general terms of use. This covers defects or issues arising after the sale. This warranty does not include parts that can wear out and need to be replaced from time to time. A consumer can also purchase warranties from third parties. Car warranties and home warranties can also be purchased from insurance companies. With the Christmas holiday a mere 7 days away, many of us are walking around doing last minute shopping for our families and friends. Many of these purchases will include electronics and most of them will come with purchases to buy an extended warranty. Although it may be tempting to buy it, do not fall into the trap. Most manufacturers already have warranties on their products, which will probably cover how long you'll use the product anyway, and you're probably getting additional coverage from your credit card (call your credit card provider to get details) so these warranties are nothing but paying the retailer more money. One thing you can do to help protect yourself is looking for gh sealed products! Gh seal manufacturer has a limited warranty of two years on top of warranty, so if the product becomes defective within that time, let us know and we will refund your money... So leave the extended warranty and keep a little extra money in your pocket this holiday season. You may be able to find out more about this and similar content at the August 27, 2009 Chrysler piano.io, announcing that they will skip their lifetime powertrain warranty on all vehicles starting from the 2010 model year. Chrysler will instead provide a 5-year, 100,000-mile guarantee. Powertrain warranties usually cover problems with engines, transmissions and other driveline components. A Chrysler spokesman said the decision was made because consumers prefer warranties with a certain time period. We're not sure what kind of bizzaro world Chrysler is living in, but if offered an alternative, why would consumers prefer a limited warranty? It just doesn't make sense. On the plus side, the new warranty program now includes SRT and wiper models. Further, if the cars are sold before the warranty runs, the warranty will be transferred to the new owners. Previous lifetime warranties did not allow transferships to new owners. This could raise the residual values of the future Chrysler model and make leasing a tad bit cheaper. It's also a way to draw attention to your product, explain its benefits, engage potential customers and stop selling. This view, touch and written message is accomplished through marketing elements. While packaging labels are often chosen based on price and practicality, creative design can serve as a promotional tool for your product. Compare package labeling of similar items in the market and develop a design that stands out from the crowd. For example, if most of your competitors use round panels, go with square or diamond shapes. If they use flat labels, use raised or texterized labels with raised metal limits or other feature that make it more noticeable is. Product labels should be eye-catching. Branding Color Color Using to isolate yourself in the market should be different from your competition and be big and bold enough to catch the eyes of consumers. Use labels with large typefaces to make it easier to identify your product. Avoid thin or flowery scripts that can be difficult to read or that are lost in the crowd. The name of the main product should be the attention of the label you use on the front of your package, and the marketing copy should be on the back. You should emphasize your brand the terminology used in writing copies for your package labels and guarantees, tell consumers what your unique sales proposition is and explain why your product is better. Depending on your product, this can mean an emphasis on differentiating from a particular manufacturing process, country of origin, remarkable ingredients, performance levels or similar goods. There are all examples of things to emphasize different ingredients, new features or a new shape. There is a guarantee that money promises back or full satisfaction, as well as other corporate claims should strengthen your company's philosophy as well as increase buyers' confidence in your product. The claims must be verifiable and provide instructions on how to contact the company if the product fails to live up to the claims. This approach demonstrates that the company is standing behind its products and focuses on customer service and satisfaction. A complete reform of your labels and guarantees should draw attention - at least initially - in new form. This lets customers know that the product is still the familiar brand they're looking for, even if the package looks different. For example, more products -- the same value!
